

SwiftOutbound: what we found, and how we would run paid search

Prepared for Ryan Ing · September 8, 2026 · RJ Bryan Tres Reyes

Ryan, you asked for a resume and a portfolio. This is the more useful version of that. Before writing anything I went through swiftoutbound.com properly: every page in your sitemap, the page source, your tracking setup, your search visibility and your social footprint. What follows is what I actually found, and what I would do about it in the first ninety days.

Everything here is checked rather than assumed. Where I could not verify something from the outside, I say so instead of guessing.

WHAT SWIFTOUTBOUND DOES, IN YOUR WORDS

Your homepage headline is "I Introduce PI Firms To Proven Lead Vendors", and the model is free to the firm, unbiased, and guaranteed to meet their criteria. You educate buyers on what a quality lead actually is: exclusive rather than shared, an accident date under six months, insurance or UIM coverage in place, and a vendor with proven results in that specific state. You name the real constraints too, SB37 in California and uninsured motorist rates in Texas and Florida.

That is a sharper position than most lead brokers have. You are not selling leads, you are selling judgement about who to buy them from. It matters for paid search because it changes what the ad has to promise and who it has to reach.

You run four verticals: MVA legal on the homepage, tax relief, B2B SaaS, and life insurance.

HOW I AUDITED IT

- Pulled and read all seven URLs in your sitemap, plus the page source of each
- Checked every page for analytics, tag manager, Google Ads conversion tags and pixels
- Checked title tags, meta descriptions, H1 structure and indexable word count per page
- Probed for landing pages referenced in navigation and in search results but missing from the sitemap
- Reviewed your public social footprint and what is linked from the site

Audited from the outside only. I have not seen your ad account, your CRM or your actual lead volumes, so nothing here assumes numbers I cannot see.

What we found

FINDING 1 · THE ONE THAT MATTERS MOST

There is no conversion tracking on your website at all. Not on one page, on every page. No Google Analytics, no Tag Manager, no Google Ads conversion tag, no Meta pixel, no session recording. I checked all seven URLs in your sitemap and every one came back clean.

This is the reason I would not spend a dollar on Google Ads in week one. Without a conversion tag, Google's bidding has nothing to optimise toward, so it optimises for clicks it thinks are relevant rather than calls that turn into vendor introductions. You would be paying to find out which keywords are expensive, not which ones make money. Every week that runs untracked is a week of spend you cannot learn anything from afterwards, because the data was never recorded.

Your booking flow runs through cal.com, so the conversion is defined and easy to capture. The work is straightforward. It just has to happen before the spend, not after.

All seven pages share the identical title tag: "SwiftOutbound". Your MVA legal page, tax relief page, SaaS page and life insurance page are indistinguishable to a search engine.

The title tag is the single strongest on-page signal you have and it is currently spent on your company name, which nobody searches for. A firm looking for pre-qualified MVA leads has no way to find the right page, and Google has no reason to rank any one of them for anything specific. This also drags on paid search, because landing page relevance feeds Quality Score, which feeds what you pay per click.

|-----------------|---------------|-----|----------|
| / (MVA legal)   | SwiftOutbound | 1   | None     |
| /saas           | SwiftOutbound | 1   | None     |
| /taxrelief      | SwiftOutbound | 2   | None     |
| /insurance      | SwiftOutbound | 2   | None     |
| /case-study     | SwiftOutbound | 0   | None     |
| /resources      | SwiftOutbound | 1   | None     |
| /privacy-policy | SwiftOutbound | 1   | None     |

What we found, continued

FINDING 3

Your case study page has no readable content and no H1. It loads, but there is nothing a search engine or a first-time visitor can actually read on it.

That is your proof page. In a market where every competitor claims exclusive, high-intent leads, the case study is the thing that separates you, and right now it is blank to anyone who is not already convinced. Your life insurance page, by contrast, carries four named testimonials with real companies attached. That proof exists. It is just not where a PI firm will look for it.

FINDING 4

A page search engines know about now returns a 404. Your /yc page still appears in search results but the URL is dead. Two booking links also coexist on the site, an older Calendly link and your current cal.com link, and the footer still reads 2025.

What this means before you spend

You are hiring for Google Ads. The honest read is that the account is not the constraint yet. Three things sit upstream of it, and each one changes what the same budget returns.

1. You cannot optimise toward an outcome you are not recording

This is the whole game in lead gen. With conversion tracking live, Google's smart bidding learns which searches produce booked calls and pushes budget there on its own. Without it, you are bidding on assumptions. Fixing this first is worth more than any amount of clever keyword work done after.

2. Paid traffic needs a page built to convert, not a page built to explain

Your homepage does a good job of teaching a firm what a quality lead is. That is genuinely useful content and it builds trust. It is not, however, what a paid click needs. Someone searching for MVA leads at eleven at night wants to know what they get, why you are unbiased, and how to book, in that order, without scrolling through an education piece first. The education still has a job. It just belongs after the ask rather than in front of it.

3. Your strongest asset is the position, and the ads are not using it

"Free to work with me" and "unbiased introductions" is a rare angle in a market full of vendors selling their own inventory. That is the line that should be doing the heavy lifting in ad copy, because it is the one competitors structurally cannot copy. A vendor cannot claim to be unbiased about their own leads.

WHERE THE BUDGET ACTUALLY LEAKS IN PI PAID SEARCH

- Searches from the wrong side of the market. "Personal injury leads" is searched by firms buying and by vendors selling. Half that traffic can never become a client, and without negative keyword work you pay for all of it.
- Accident victims, not firms. PI is one of the most expensive keyword sets in Google Ads because law firms bid hard for claimants. Your buyer is the firm, not the victim, and the two intents share vocabulary. Getting that separation right is most of the saving.
- State-level reality. You already say most agencies are only strong in one or two states. Geography should be structural in the account rather than a filter added later.

What we would do

PHASE 1 · WEEK 1, BEFORE ANY SPEND

Make the outcome measurable

Install Tag Manager and GA4, then a Google Ads conversion action on the cal.com booking, with a separate action for email enquiries so the two are not counted as one thing. Verify each fires correctly with real test bookings rather than assuming the tag is live because it was installed. Retire the old Calendly link so one booking path carries everything.

PHASE 2 · WEEKS 1 TO 2

Build one landing page that paid traffic can convert on

A dedicated MVA page for ads, separate from the homepage, that leads with the unbiased introduction position, states the quality criteria you already teach, carries your named testimonials, and books in one action. The homepage keeps doing its education job for organic visitors. Ads stop competing with it.

Build the account around buyer intent

Tight ad groups split by intent and by state rather than one broad campaign. An aggressive negative keyword list from day one to cut claimant traffic and vendor traffic, which is where most of the waste lives. Ad copy built on the position rather than on adjectives. Then structured testing, one variable at a time, so a result means something.

PHASE 4 · ONGOING

Report on cost per booked call, not clicks

A weekly read on what it costs to produce a booked consultation, which searches produced them, and what to kill. I will tell you when something is not working rather than presenting a flat week as progress.

WEBSITE AND SEARCH, ALONGSIDE THE ADS

- Unique title tags and meta descriptions per page, written to the vertical each page serves
- One H1 per page, and real indexable content on the case study page
- Fix the dead /yc URL so it redirects rather than 404s, and update the 2025 footer
- Add the missing pages to the sitemap so nothing live is invisible to search
- Build the MVA page toward the terms firms actually search, so paid and organic stop competing

SOCIAL

Your only linked social presence is your personal LinkedIn, and in your market that is the correct primary channel, because PI firm owners are on LinkedIn and they buy from a person rather than a logo. I would not build a company page for the sake of it. What I would do is treat your own profile as the channel: turn the lead quality criteria you already teach on the site into a repeatable posting rhythm, since it is genuinely useful content that positions you as the unbiased expert rather than another vendor. That is also what makes cold outbound land warmer.

Where I am lighter, said plainly: I am strong on organic social, content and the systems behind it. Paid social buying at large scale is not my deepest craft. On this account it does not need to be.

Why me, and how to start

I am RJ Bryan Tres Reyes, founder of Balay ni Bruno & Co., a small operational support studio. I am also a Claude engineer, which is the part that matters for a role like this.

On paid search I run an AI system that does the heavy lifting: keyword and competitor research, campaign and ad group structure, ad copy variations, negative keyword mining, and daily performance reporting. I drive it with the same discipline I use on Meta buying, which is structured testing, clean tracking, and decisions taken from the numbers. That is why the platform gap you raised in August closes in days rather than months. The repetitive work is automated and I bring the judgement.

Related work we run today: for JR Signing Services, a professional services firm, we built a GoHighLevel client onboarding automation and a lead engine of more than 1,800 verified contacts with daily outreach. We run GoHighLevel as the live CRM and follow up system for a construction client across three sub accounts. We have built brand specific AI systems for a construction firm and an ecommerce brand, and we run our own command centre at balaynibruno.co/os.

I am not claiming to be a ten year PI paid search veteran and I will not pretend otherwise. What I am offering is someone who can do the work quickly and well, backed by a system most solo specialists do not have, and who will tell you the truth about what is working.

THE SIMPLEST WAY TO START

Give me the account and the goal, and I will do Phase 1 first: get the tracking live and verified so that whatever you spend from that point on is measurable. That is a small, contained piece of work and you can judge me on it before anything bigger is agreed.

If you would rather see thinking before commitment, tell me the state you most want to win and I will come back with the campaign structure and the negative keyword list I would launch with.
