Strong care. Leaky systems.

Elevate is a real clinical group: brain injury and mental health treated together, more than fifty specialists, over one hundred thousand patients, six Texas locations, and a 90% satisfaction rate. The care is not the problem. What holds Elevate back is everything around the care.

Patients can only reach you by phone or email. There is no way to book online anywhere on the site. Your strongest proof is buried. Your insurance and Letters of Protection story, the very thing that explains how you get paid, is confusing and hidden in an FAQ. Your six locations are hard to find in local search. Each of these is a place where a patient who wanted your care quietly leaves, and a dollar of revenue leaves with them.

The core idea of this proposal: we do not change your medicine. We fix the systems that decide whether a ready patient actually becomes a booked, paying patient, and whether an attorney-referred case moves smoothly or stalls. That is where the money is won or lost.

This document maps where Elevate earns money today, where each workflow leaks, and exactly how a partnership with Balay ni Bruno & Co. closes those leaks and grows each revenue stream. A redesigned homepage, already built, shows several of these fixes in action.

What you are really buying

Not software, and not five separate services. One dedicated assistant who learns Elevate, backed by a small family of trained AI helpers, carrying the marketing and patient-intake load with you. Everything patient-facing is drafted for your approval. Nothing goes out without your word.

Your revenue runs on three engines

Elevate does not bill standard health insurance. That makes how you get paid different from a typical clinic, and it makes the systems around payment far more important. Three engines drive the revenue.

1. Attorney-referred injury cases

Patients hurt in accidents, treated under Letters of Protection and paid as part of the legal settlement. This is a primary paid channel and it depends entirely on referral relationships and clean case coordination.

2. Self-pay patients

Brain injury, mental health, ketamine therapy, ADHD, headache and memory programs, paid directly. This engine depends on patients finding you, trusting you, and booking before they cool off.

3. Six locations of capacity

Every location is a fixed cost that earns only when its calendar is full. Empty appointment slots across six clinics are the quietest and largest form of lost revenue. Filling them is mostly a marketing and intake problem, not a clinical one.

The pattern that matters

All three engines share the same three dependencies: (1) patients can actually book without friction, (2) Letters of Protection cases stay organized and move quickly, and (3) Elevate is easy to find locally. Today, all three are manual and leaking. Fix them and every engine earns more from the work Elevate already does.

The next page shows each workflow, how it runs today, where it leaks, and what that leak costs in revenue terms.

Following the money, step by step

We traced the path a patient and a case actually take through Elevate today. Here is where each one leaks.

Workflow	How it runs today	Where it leaks	Revenue impact
Intake & scheduling	Phone and email only. No online booking, no request form, no portal. Staff schedules manually across six clinics.	Every patient who will not call right now is lost. After-hours interest goes cold by morning.	Direct loss of self-pay bookings and filled slots.
Letters of Protection	Referrals, records, and LOP paperwork tracked by hand. Case-manager contact is ad hoc.	Cases stall, records requests slip, firms drift to other clinics.	Slower pay and fewer injury cases, the highest-value channel.
Local discovery / SEO	Thin location pages, fragmented hours, little local search optimization.	Patients searching by city find competitors first.	Fewer new patients per location, every month.
Trust & conversion	Strong numbers and reviews exist but are buried. No star ratings or badges up front.	Visitors who arrive ready do not get the proof that closes them.	Lower booking rate on traffic you already have.
Content & social	Good blog with no funnel. Social light and scattered. Practice Instagram is an off-brand fitness account.	No top-of-funnel pulling new patients in.	Slow, expensive growth and weak referral confidence.
Telehealth	Offered, but mentioned only in the FAQ.	A whole way to be seen, and paid, goes unnoticed.	Missed visits from busy or distant patients.

Notice that not one of these is a clinical problem. Every leak sits in the systems around the care, which means every one is fixable without touching how Elevate treats patients.

Six moves, each tied to revenue

1 Online booking & digital intake

REVENUE

An appointment request button and form on every screen, digital intake patients finish on their phone, auto-routing to the right location, and reminders. After-hours requests get an instant auto-reply so no lead goes cold.

Money outcome: more ready patients become booked patients, and fewer no-shows. This is the fastest revenue win.

2 Letters of Protection engine

REVENUE

A simple tracking board for every attorney-referred case so nothing stalls, plus a warm, steady outreach rhythm to referring firms. We have already gathered a starting list of 31 Texas personal injury firms that work this model, ready to nurture on your word.

Money outcome: a steadier flow of your highest-value cases, paid faster, with the admin carried by us.

3 Per-location pages & local SEO

REVENUE

Six dedicated, search-optimized location pages with clear hours, the specialists there, and the right local keywords, plus clean Google Business Profiles for all six.

Money outcome: you capture patients at the exact moment they search by city, filling slots across all six clinics.

4 Trust stack & conversion

FOUNDATION

Real numbers, review stars, and credentials placed where patients decide, plus telehealth surfaced and a clear, calm insurance and Letters of Protection explanation up front.

Money outcome: a higher share of the visitors you already get turn into booked patients.

5 Content engine & patient education

FOUNDATION

Your blog rebuilt into plain-language articles and short videos that answer the questions patients actually search, feeding the service pages. One unified social calendar, drafted for approval.

Money outcome: a steady stream of new patients found through search, at far lower cost than ads.

6 Patient-story & clinician video library

FOUNDATION

Short, privacy-careful recovery stories, clinician introductions, and treatment explainers for the website, social, and the reminder emails a nervous new patient reads before a first visit.

Money outcome: higher trust and show-rates, especially for high-value programs like ketamine therapy.

We already rebuilt your homepage

Before asking for anything, we built a working redesign of your homepage in your own green brand, refined. It is live to view now, and every section fixes a specific leak from the workflow map.

- + Above-the-fold appointment request form and button, the single biggest fix, because there is no online booking on the current site.
- + A trust band of your real numbers (90% satisfaction, 100,000+ patients, 25+ years, 50+ specialists) placed where patients decide.
- + Telehealth pulled out of the FAQ into its own clear callout.
- + A calm Insurance and Letters of Protection section, so the way you get paid is explained early instead of scaring patients off.
- + Reviews with stars, a stronger services grid, and a patient-education funnel built from your existing blog.

Everything on that page is built from real facts about your practice. The next step would be to drop in your own photography, connect the booking and review sections to live tools, and adjust any wording you would like.

One team, not five tools

You partner with Balay ni Bruno & Co. and get a dedicated assistant who learns Elevate, backed by a small family of trained AI helpers that make the work faster and more consistent. You talk to people. The helpers do the heavy lifting behind them.

One point of contact

A dedicated assistant who owns the work, so you are never managing a stack of vendors.

Nothing goes out without you

Every post, page, and message is drafted for review. You approve, then it ships.

Built around healthcare

Privacy first, careful language, patient stories handled with the care a clinic requires.

It grows with you

Start with the highest-return fixes, add the rest as the practice expands.

Intake & coordination

These helpers are part of the partnership, never sold separately. They are how one assistant does the work of a full marketing and intake team for Elevate.

Why this model protects your money

Because the same team owns intake, Letters of Protection coordination, local pages, and content, nothing falls between vendors. The patient who books, the case that moves, and the search that finds you are all handled by people who know your numbers.

WHERE WE START

A simple first 90 days

We do not try to do everything at once. We start with the moves that protect and grow revenue fastest, then build out.

1

Weeks 1 to 3

Launch online requests and digital intake, set up reminders, learn the practice and the Letters of Protection workflow.

2

Weeks 4 to 8

Build the six location pages, publish the first patient education, bring social onto one calendar, film first videos.

3

Weeks 9 to 12

Steady content rhythm, grow the video library, begin attorney-firm outreach, review the numbers and tune.

The engagement

This is an ongoing partnership, not a one-off project. We begin with the highest-return workflows above, at a monthly partnership scope we shape together based on where you want to move first. Because the work compounds, the value grows each month: more booked patients, steadier cases, and a practice that looks as established online as it is in the exam room.

The next step is one conversation

This is a starting plan, not a final one. The best version comes from a short talk about what Elevate needs most right now. We will walk through it together, pick where to begin, and shape the scope around your practice.
